

PHOENIX BOW

WEAPON (LONGBOW), VERY RARE (OPTIONAL ATTUNEMENT)

This elegant weapon bears uncanny resemblance to the bird after which it is named. The grip, guard, and arrow rest are made from hardened copper and bronze alloy, with the limbs being made from treated Phoenix feathers. It is also adorned with 3 fire red rubies on the grip and guard, all of which twinkle as if a fire burned within.

The bow is always warm to the touch, even underwater or in freezing temperatures. If a user is attuned to the bow, they may will the feathered limbs to collapse in to make the bow fit in a 12x8x4 inch space as a free action, they may also use a free action to will the bow to return to its original form, or any form inbetween the two states (such as making the bow 'ruffle' its feathers for fun).

The bow instantly catches fire to any wooden arrow that it touches, even before firing. Arrows lit this way are destroyed after dealing damage and gain the following benefits:

ARROW EFFECTS

Arrow Type Additional Effects (when fired)

+0	1d6 Fire damage, 1d4 to user if not attuned
+1	2d6 Fire damage, 1d6 to user if not attuned
+2	4d6 Fire damage, 2d6 to user if not attuned
+3	6d6 Fire damage, 3d6 to user if not resistant

Finally, the bow has 1 charge. The attuned user may will the bow to fire an arrow of pure fire as an attack. This arrow acts as a +3 arrow for in the above table. When fired, the bow makes a loud Phoenix bird call.

The bow regains its charge after the bow is left in the 'compact' form mentioned above in a roaring fire overnight and completely covered in the ashes of that fire after it burns itself out. (the bow will retain its warm temperature even if it is grabbed directly from the fire).

Rebekah Madsen
gakmstock@gmail.com/gakmstock.com

M_R